Afterword

Dillard
People are very special.

Warm,
exuberant,
and friendly . . .

but sometimes indifferent.

Dillard people are creative and aware . . .

often lonely in the midst of many and discouraged
over things past and present —

but we will not have suffered alone.

Dillard people
are enthusiastic and competitive . . .

individual in expressing themselves and in relating to life.

We are the Black Aesthetic

We are the Black Aesthetic
The Sounds and memories of eons of spiritual harmony comprised as a unity

An entity within the realms of a phenomenal light source
As you acknowledge our substance Use us — to guide your strengths,
And disperse of our weaknesses

The growing voices of the yearlings eager to add to the memories of Spiritual harmony.

Our already ever growing energies
Are the spices of “Blueness” itself As the sun does not shine we become The proud bearers of a noble absence of light

And our images become visual pictures of reality, on the soul-less shadows of an alien humanity Look to us for direction and comfort
For our voices and melodies will always — Be Heard . . .

Dedication

The 1976 Le Diable Bleu staff dedicates this book to the students of Dillard University with the hope that they will maintain an active interest in college life and the community, and that they will endeavor to fulfill the ultimate purpose of Dillard University — to become more human in Mind and Spirit and to make Society more humane.

The goal is a Tomorrow far better than Today . . .
